A little bit about Bronson...

Bronson came to the centre as his previous owner was unable to keep him. Bronson is a really sweet boy once he knows you, he is extremely nervous and unsure around people he does not know especially men. We have been working hard alongside our behaviourist to help him overcome his insecurities. Bronson is now much more relaxed generally and very loving and friendly with the staff but can still be shy when meeting people for the first time. Bronson is very good out and about on his walks and walks well on his lead, he is sociable with most other dogs whilst out and about tending really to keep himself to himself. He will need adopters who will carry on with his training and keep him safe while out and about, he is not the kind of dog who will want strangers coming up to him to try and interact with him, he is just too shy for that at the moment. Bronson loves to be with his people and unfortunately does not appreciate his own size and will always try and sit on your lap for a cuddle. He will sit for hours with you just enjoying all the fuss he can get. Bronson will always make you smile if you are feeling a bit down and can brighten up your day in an instant. All the staff here at the centre love the big guy and would love to see him happily settled in a new home. Adopters will need to commit to multiple meets here at the centre before adoption in order to build up a bond with him before actually taking him home. They will also have a training session with the behaviourist to help him settle in to his new home. Bronson is a very loving, loyal and great dog who will make a fantastic addition to the family. Bronson will need to be the only pet in an adult only home.
